A Message from Colleen Low Larkin, Managing Editor.

I originally started to write this editor's message with the trite and all too common "New Year's greeting", which sounded pretty silly considering that by February, New Year's greetings are actually "old news". Baby New Year has to have shed that diaper by now, right?

I have to admit, I do have a good feeling about 2011 for the IT world. Maybe it's the fact that a movie about software was a top contender for the Oscar this year. OK, "The Social Network" is really about Facebook, but without the ability to write complex algorithms and design front end interfaces, there would be no Facebook. And where would we be then? (Probably being more productive with our time, but that's another story).

E1 Reporting: Current Trends Around the Use of the JD Edwards Report Writing Tool, by Penny Allen

Are you under the misconception that batch jobs have to look like "that"? Or that only IT can create reports using ERW? This article looks at some common perceptions about ERW and how you can have a different "view" of this powerful tool.

E1 Technical / Customizing EnterpriseOne: EnterpriseOne Schedule by Fiscal Date Pattern, by Mike Wright

Do you have a 'different' Fiscal Date Pattern than most companies? If you are on 4-4-5 accounting, you'll want to read this to take advantage of the code Mike provides to get the E1 Job Scheduler to run correctly in your environment.

Speaking of Facebook: Have you become a "fan" of JDEtips yet? If you haven't, please be sure to "like us" soon, so that you can follow what's going on at JDEtips on a more regular basis. We promise to keep our news "worthy" of your wall. And, if we can add 100 additional fans by March 15, we'll put all of our fans' names into a drawing for a free JDEtips Training Manual of the winner's choice. That's reason enough to "really, really like us."

As you may have heard, we're now offering a virtual attendance option for some of our JDEtips University classes. The schedule in the left column lists which of our training classes can be attended either at our Dallas, Texas, training facility or from the comforts of your own location.

Until next time...
